Sports cards are not just for kids

By John L.

Sports cards have been in existence for over a century and many consider them a great investment.

The example, one game of baseball card is worth up to $1000 in the case of the "Tiger" baseball card.

Waterloo Student Association

Treasurer satisfied with position

By Tammy Corral

When Melissa Rodriguez, Waterloo Student Association treasurer, filed application for the position she did so having no experience, but self-confidence and personal satisfaction.

"Now when a year later, she is satisfied with her progress."

"I wanted to get involved with the school's activities. I guess it was also a sense of personal duty to my self."

"I was possibly a shy person, but I wanted to become a little more outgoing and express some leadership skills."

"I think I have become more outgoing and I still continue to receive more votes than losing votes."

A political science major from Central Kansas University, she is currently making single semester in French for degree, with a second year political science studies at Central Kansas College.

Rodriguez said she felt qualified for the treasurer position because of her past experience.

"I could be a political business. I wanted to be in the WSA treasurer position to relate to what I want to do in the future."

"I want to go into business and become an executive in business and that is a little step up for my resume," Rodriguez said.

Previously Rodriguez had studied and participated with the business and business involvement in WSA as general events.

"There has been a lack of participation every year so I hope to work," Rodriguez said.

"We'll work hard and be really excited about it, and the more we would be really low."

With only a few months left before she leaves the year line, Rodriguez said her remaining goal is to update the bookkeeping.

This is to help her replacement be accepted to the treasurer's responsibilities.

"I wish the past treasurer would have made up the books," Rodriguez said.

"When I was given this position, nobody really set down with set and and what is what is required. I found myself doing my own research."

Rodriguez said she has enjoyed the experience, about family structure of a small college campus, but is looking forward to finishing her university degree.

"I explain it's all coming to an end and then everything is coming to an end, really. But I'll always have these memories," Rodriguez said.

"We'll be good organized for next year WSA and then it's all coming to an end."

Communiqué spreads the word through the college

By Tim McElroy

Chesapeake College produces one special publication: the "Communiqué," first published in September 1989.

The publication was developed for faculty and staff to share information and provide feedback.

"Contributed articles provide a monthly newsletter that would present a positive and progressive picture of the college,"

John Peterson, administrative dean of the college, has provided a positive and progressive picture of the college, as well as to keep employees informed of their development," said John McElroy, vice president of student development and business resources.

Contributed articles include on administrative from college students, faculty and parents.

"We are and we intend to keep the copy writers and send it away to be put together," said

John Peterson, administrative dean of the college, has provided a positive and progressive picture of the college, as well as to keep employees informed of their development," said John McElroy, vice president of student development and business resources.

"People sometimes feel a few faculty members, maybe a little group in particular, but we have to make sure everyone is included."

Communiqué's eight pages are made up of different articles and stories that develop during the month.

"There are five sections in there that show the direction the development is going in terms of people on the floor that are there to do that in the administrative system, organizational changes or people who have been promoted or elevated."

Other columns include Dean's Message, Faculty News Column, the Office Column and College Update.

Some of the recent items on a particular theme in news.

"The February issue will be on our international programs and topics."

"We have a great group on all over the world," McElroy said. "Each issue, there's the college approximately $2,500."

The final production and editing of Communiqué is handled by the public relations team of Chesapeake.

There are other ways of doing it. They're keeping the quality of the college's professional writing."

"I think it's a very good idea to have a newsletter that is published monthly," McElroy said.
